What’s the Point?

This is not a comprehensive course in the field of state politics. It will not survey the literature to prepare you for an exam, it will not investigate all of the operations of the three branches of state government, and it will not make you an expert in the politics of each of the 50 states. Its more narrow focus will be how our general knowledge of politics has been advanced by several streams of scholarship that take advantage of the unique research opportunities presented by the American states.

These streams tend to have three common characteristics. First, they are motivated by the same types of questions that have interested political scientists working in other fields. Second, they look at phenomena that vary significantly across the states, hoping to isolate the effects of one factor by comparing states which are (ostensibly) otherwise similar. Third, they are self-consciously cumulative enterprises that use theoretical or empirical innovations to advance previous works. By focusing on these sorts of literatures, we will ignore important areas of state politics research and reality. Please see me if you’d like citations that can help you gain a general familiarity with the operations of state governments or an introduction to literatures that we are giving short shrift (like state courts, interest groups, female and minority legislators, bureaucracy, committees, party organizations, or policies).

Our seminar discussions will sacrifice scope for rigorous examinations of the formulas and flaws of each work. Each class member will present a reading approximately every other week, giving a conference-style PowerPoint and proposing questions for the rest of the class to consider. My ultimate goal is to turn you into state politics researchers by figuring out what we already know about each topic, what the remaining questions are, and how you can go about answering them.

Where are the Readings?

› Three books are available for purchase at the bookstore: Politics in the American States, A Comparative Analysis, Tenth Edition (very different from prior editions), V.O. Key Jr.’s Southern Politics in State and Nation and Erikson, Wright, and McIver’s Statehouse Democracy: Public Opinion in the American States.

› Articles are on JSTOR and chapters will be available each week in the graduate student lounge.

What are the Assignments?

› 30% of your grade will be based on class presentations and participation.

› 20% will come from a four-page research design due on or before October 23.

› 20% will come from a four-page research design due on or before November 20.

› 30% will come from an 8-page research design and exploratory data analysis due December 17th.
Course Outline

Part I. What Does State Politics Research Look Like?

October 2. Studying State Politics

October 9th. Southern Politics in the Past and Today

ii. Devin Caughey, “Representation without Parties: Reconsidering the One-Party South, 1930-62” (I will circulate)

October 23rd. Do People Get What they Want from State Governments?

i. Statehouse Democracy, Chapters 4,7,8.

October 30th. Parties in State Legislatures.

November 3rd (Note Special Day!). Governors and Legislative-Executive Bargaining.

November 13th. Policy Innovation and Diffusion.

November 20th. The Politics of Income Inequality

December 4th. The Good and Bad of Direct Democracy

v. Mike Binder, Matthew Childers and Natalie Johnson “Campaigns and the Mitigation of Framing Effects on Voting Behavior: A Natural and Field Experiment,” Forthcoming Political Behavior.

December 11th. Legislative Structure: Term Limits and Professionalism

