Course Summary and Objectives:

What do we owe to others in society? On what do we base this judgment?

Given that there exist disagreements between individuals, groups, and societies about the proper basis for social values, how do we negotiate them?

This course will explore several important foundations for social ethics, paying particular attention to arguments about cultural relativism, tolerance, and colonialism. After completing this course you should be able to:

- Understand the most commonly used philosophical frameworks of modern social ethics such as deontology, utilitarianism, and arguments from nature.
- Apply these frameworks to new social problems.
- Make a strong argument that a given controversial social practice is acceptable/unacceptable.
- Visit another country with the confidence that you have some idea how to behave yourself.
- Identify and avoid common rhetorical fallacies.

Information on Readings:

Please complete the assigned readings before each class. (Readings are listed in the schedule section below.) Recommended readings may be useful for oral projects, research papers, or to help satisfy your curiosity.

Book for Purchase:

Appiah, Cosmopolitanism: Ethics in a World of Strangers

Articles, etc. on reserve:
Use the libraries e-reserve. The password will be emailed to you on the first day of class.

Grading:

- 20% In-class quizzes. (There may be up to three pop-quizzes per day, including reading checks where you will be asked to briefly summarize arguments from the readings. Three will be dropped, then the remaining will be curved to compute your quiz grade.)
- 5% Take-home assignment on Montaigne (due 7/7)
- 15% In-class mid-term examination (IDs, short answers, and short essays)
- 20% Position paper: You will select a social problem which poses an ethical problem. Then you will present decision-makers with a memo which first lays out multiple ways of viewing this problem and then presents your argument for how to resolve this problem.
- 5% Prop 8 Arguments Analysis, to be completed in-class on 7/28
- 25% Comprehensive final examination (IDs, short answers, essay)
- 10% Section

Turnitin.com:

All written work will be submitted to turnitin.com and is due online at the same time it is due in class. You may need to set up a turnitin.com account. If you are not already listed when you go to turnitin.com, you can find the class using the class ID [To Be Announced] and the enrollment password [To Be Announced].
