Course Description:
The purpose of this course is to provide a thematic and historical study of the Arab-Israeli conflict in general and the Israeli-Palestinian in particular. This is an academic course, and thus the objective is to be objective and to strive to maintain a balanced and impartial, yet critical approach towards this multifaceted and multi-dimensional dispute (with political, cultural and religious aspects), by now one of the longest in history. We will survey the origin of the Zionist and Palestinian national movements and their cultural and religious characteristics, as well as conflicting constitutions and ideologies, examine their historical evolutions since the late 1800s to the present time, and contemplate the trajectory of the conflict in the coming years. We will do so by examining the tensions between concepts like conflict and diplomacy, democracy and non-representative governments, security and peace, military conflicts and peace accords, localism and globalism, history and religion, myths and ideologies, identity and interest, land, water and oil. In addition, we will address critically notions like Western Civilization and modernity, colonialism/imperialism, nationalism and fundamentalism, and finally particularism and universalism.

Procedures:
This is political science in the making, it is an ongoing contemporary dispute, and we literally cannot foresee what will happen in the coming days. It is loaded with conflicting world-views, feelings, emotions, reasoning, interests, interpretations, and narratives. Therefore, it is important that you address the issues that we discussed critically and reach independent insights and opinions. Do not take anything for granted not even my words. Please address the reading assignments attentively and come to class ready to raise and discuss questions. In addition, we will dedicate part of the class to analyze and discuss relevant documents.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR NEWS REPORTS:

Please write three one-page reports of the week’s news, relevant to the region. These reports should be a 50/50 combination of fact-based “reporting” of what happened, and critical discussion of the various perspectives that you discover while learning about the event in one or more of the various news sources. Obviously, perspectives on a particular news event might be very diverse. There is rarely a consensus. You should use the Web as well as conventional news sources for your information. For suggestions, see the list of sites below.

These papers are always due on the first class of the week (Tuesdays.) You are required to complete only three reports, so please do not request extensions for late submissions.
